

Being a Naval Architect in the 21st Century

Michał Migalski, CEO of NAVA (Poland)

Michał Migalski became NAVA's CEO in 2012 when he was only 28 years old and by power of example and excellent management skills, Michał transformed the company from a small design office of less than 10 engineers into one of the most respected engineering companies in Europe, now counting over 100 designers.

He's coming to Romania, invited by GLO MARINE and AAN (Asociația Arhitecților Navali), to share his views on what being a Naval Architect in the 21st century means, and how each of us has the power to change the world through engineering.
